

The Honorable Marsha J. Pechman

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
WESTERN DISTRICT OF WASHINGTON AT SEATTLE

JOVANNA EDGE, et al.,

Plaintiffs,

v.

CITY OF EVERETT,

Defendant.

Case No. 2:17-cv-01361-MJP

PLAINTIFFS' REPLY TO DEFENDANT'S OPPOSITION TO PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

NOTE ON MOTION CALENDAR
November 3, 2017

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1
2	Introduction	1
3
4	Argument.....	1
5	A. The Baristas meet the standard for protected expression, and the ordinances
6	violate the First Amendment because they are not narrowly tailored to prevent
7	crime.	1
8	1. The standard for protected expression is not limited to a “particularized
9	message” that will necessarily be understood by those who view it.	1
10	2. Strict scrutiny applies to the Dress-Code Ordinance because it is
11	content-based targeting the Baristas’ “sexualized” message.	3
12	3. The City’s justification for the ordinances is pretext because neither
13	ordinance addresses preventing crime.	4
14	4. The Dress-Code Ordinance fails intermediate scrutiny because it
15	imposes a greater restriction on expression than necessary to advance
16	City interests.....	7
17	B. The Ordinances violate substantive due process and equal protection.	8
18	1. The Ordinances violate substantive due process because they prevent the
19	Baristas from earning a living in their chosen field.	8
20	2. The Ordinances violate equal protection because they only apply to
21	women.	8
22	3. The Citywide Ordinance does not advance the City’s stated reasons for
23	the law, and thus fails a rational-basis review.	10
24	C. The Baristas have proven irreparable harm and that the balance of hardships
25	tips sharply in their favor.	11
26
27	Conclusion	12
28

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases

Anderson v. City of Hermosa Beach , 621 F.3d 1051 (9th Cir. 2010)	2, 7
City of Los Angeles v. Alameda Books, Inc. , 535 U.S. 425 (2002).....	7
Clark v. Cmty. for Creative Non-Violence , 468 U.S. 288 (1984).....	7
Conn v. Gabbert , 526 U.S. 286 (1999)	8
Hurley v. Irish-Am. Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Grp. of Boston , 515 U.S. 557 (1995)	1, 2
Klein v. City of San Clemente , 584 F.3d 1196 (9th Cir. 2009)	11
Members of the City Council of Los Angeles v. Taxpayers for Vincent , 466 U.S. 789 (1984)	3
Meyer v. Nebraska , 262 U.S. 390 (1923)	8
Mississippi Univ. for Women v. Hogan , 458 U.S. 718 (1982)	8, 9
Obergefell v. Hodges , 135 S.Ct. 2584 (2015).....	8
Personnel Adm’r v. Feeney , 442 U.S. 256 (1979)	9
Rent-A-Ctr., Inc. v. Canyon Television & Appliance Rental, Inc. , 944 F.2d 597 (9th Cir. 1991)	11
Spence v. Washington , 418 U.S. 405 (1974)	1
United States v. Playboy Entm’t Grp., Inc. , 529 U.S. 803 (2000)	4

INTRODUCTION

The City misstates the standard for expression under the First Amendment. The Supreme Court clarified that requiring a particularized message “is not a condition of constitutional protection.” The City submits an expert declaration opining that the message is one of sexualization. But whether the Baristas’ message is one of freedom, empowerment, openness, acceptance, approachability, vulnerability, individuality—or sexuality, as the City interprets it—the expression is nonetheless protected. And the City’s focus on a sexualized message confirms its goal is not to prevent crime, but rather to suppress the message of sexualization. The City cannot overcome the strict scrutiny which applies to this content-based regulation.

The stated reasons for the ordinances are pretext. The City’s existing lewd-conduct ordinance and laws against prostitution are sufficient to protect its interests. The fact that two criminals violated those laws several years ago does not justify imposing a dress code on law-abiding baristas now. The City cannot show that wearing bikinis while serving coffee has caused any of the alleged secondary effects. And the City misstates evidence when arguing that crime continues at bikini-barista stands. It does not.

The Court should grant a preliminary injunction because the ordinances violate the First Amendment, as well as the Fourteenth Amendment’s substantive due-process and equal-protection guarantees.

ARGUMENT

A. The Baristas meet the standard for protected expression, and the ordinances violate the First Amendment because they are not narrowly tailored to prevent crime.

1. The standard for protected expression is not limited to a “particularized message” that will necessarily be understood by those who view it.

The City argues that the First Amendment only protects conduct conveying a “particularized message” with a great likelihood that the message will be understood by those who view it. See Spence v. Washington, 418 U.S. 405, 411 (1974). The standard is not so rigid. The Supreme Court clarified that “a narrow, succinctly articulable message is not a condition of constitutional protection....” Hurley v. Irish-Am. Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Grp. of Boston, 515 U.S. 557, 569 (1995). If protection was “confined to expressions conveying a ‘particularized

1 message’” then the First Amendment “would never reach the unquestionably shielded”
2 protection of various artists. Id. In Hurley, the Court answered whether a parade is protected
3 expression even though the message may be unclear. Id. at 568–70. The Court unanimously
4 found “protected expression that inheres in a parade is not limited to its banners and songs”
5 because “the Constitution looks beyond written or spoken words as mediums of expression.” Id.
6 at 569.

7 In Anderson v. City of Hermosa Beach, 621 F.3d 1051 (9th Cir. 2010), the Ninth Circuit
8 interpreted Hurley broadly. The ordinance in Anderson imposed a ban on tattoo parlors, just as 9 the Dress-Code ordinance operates as a ban on bikini-barista stands. The city in Anderson argued 10 that the act of tattooing someone does not “carry with it an intent to convey a message that will 11 be understood by those who viewed it.” Id. at 1060. “The district court assumed that the process
12 of tattooing is at most ‘non-verbal conduct expressive of an idea’ rather than speech itself.” Id. at 13 1059. But the Ninth Circuit held “that tattooing is purely expressive activity...entitled to full 14 First Amendment protection....” Id.

15 Serving coffee in a bikini is pure expression regardless of whether that expression can be 16 reduced to a “narrow, succinctly articulable message.” See Hurley, 515 U.S. at 569. The Baristas
17 are engaged in expression, essentially performing, the entire time they are working. Their style of 18 dress while serving coffee to customers makes the expression possible. Serving coffee while 19 confidently wearing a bikini is like marching in a parade. The message may be interpreted and 20 perceived in different ways, but like the parade in Hurley the Baristas are engaged in expressive
21 activity. Like a tattoo artist in Anderson, Plaintiff Natalie Bjerke designs all her own outfits
22 specifically for the bikini-barista stand to enhance and personalize her performance. (Dkt. No. 32-23 1, Ex. B at 27:24–28:15.) The bikini-barista stand provides her the unique forum for her 24 expression. She explains it is the “the only place that I can express and show off my outfits that 25 I’ve made. It’s my only chance that I have to express myself like that.” (Id. at 29:7–10.) If the 26 Dress-Code Ordinance is enforced, Ms. Bjerke will be denied her right to express herself using 27 the distinctive outfits she creates for the bikini-barista environment. At the very least, the 28 Baristas are engaged in the same pure expression conveyed by the parade in Hurley or the

1 tattooing in Anderson.

2 The City points to the “extreme comments posted on Plaintiffs’ Instagram photos” as 3 confirmation of their expert’s opinion that the Baristas are conveying “an entirely sexualized
4 image.” It also points out that a Barista agrees that “different customers understand what you’re 5 conveying in your bikini in different ways.” But the fact that expression—whether performance
6 art, a parade, a piece of art, a theatrical performance, or a barista in a bikini—can be interpreted
7 in different ways does not disqualify that expression from protection. If the First Amendment
8 was so limited, NFL players kneeling during the national anthem to protest police brutality would 9 not be protected expression because the President interprets this as anti-American sentiment.
10 The government may not censor activity because there are different interpretations of a speaker’s
11 message. The City acknowledges that the Baristas are expressing a message. And that expression
12 is protected, regardless of how the City perceives it.

13 2. Strict scrutiny applies to the Dress-Code Ordinance because it is content-based 14 targeting the Baristas’ “sexualized” message.

15 An ordinance is content based when it is “designed to suppress certain ideas that the City 16 finds distasteful or that it has been applied” because of the message conveyed by the expression.
17 Members of the City Council of Los Angeles v. Taxpayers for Vincent, 466 U.S. 789, 804 (1984). The 18 Dress-Code Ordinance is content based because it is designed to suppress what the City
19 interprets as a message of sexualization.

20 The City objects to women “pos[ing] in a manner suggesting they are willing to take off the 21 limited clothing they are wearing,” and objects to baristas selling photos in “outfits typical of 22 those they wear at the stands.” The City relies on Dr. Mary Ann Layden’s declaration to 23 establish that “the message received by others might send a negative message about the plaintiffs 24 to others.” The City confirms through an expert that a message is being expressed. The impetus 25 behind the City’s Dress-Code Ordinance is to kill that message because the City objects to it.

26 The City does not argue that it could survive strict scrutiny, only that strict scrutiny should 27 not apply. The Dress-Code Ordinance is content based, targeting the message, so strict scrutiny
28 applies. See United States v. Playboy Entm’t Grp., Inc., 529 U.S. 803, 813 (2000). And since less

1 restrictive means exist to regulate the City’s state interests, the Dress-Code Ordinance cannot 2 survive strict scrutiny.

3 3. The City’s justification for the ordinances is pretext because neither ordinance
4 addresses preventing crime.

5 Relying on the declaration of Captain John DeRousse, the City misleads that the “history
6 of crime, lewd conduct and exploitation at Everett’s bikini barista stands is well-established.”
7 Captain DeRousse did a keyword search using the term “barista” in the New World police
8 records system and created a log of incidents of police involvement. But of the 65 incidents listed,
9 only 12 of them occurred at or near a bikini-barista stand. (Ard Decl. ¶ 17.) The overwhelming
10 majority of them—53 incidents—did not. (Id.) They either occurred at a regular coffee stand, or 11 nowhere near a coffee stand. (Id.) Only four incidents in the roughly two-year period were of a 12 sexual nature, and three of those four occurred at regular coffee stands, not at a bikini-barista
13 stand. (Id. ¶ 18.) Additionally, most of the incidents at bikini-barista stands were determined to 14 be unfounded. (Id. ¶ 19.) The ordinances would have no effect on the type of crime that Captain 15 DeRousse reported.

16 As one justification for the ordinances, the City claims that “[c]rime and other suspicious
17 activity in and around the barista stands also is present.” But the City references police reports
18 from Yakima and Spokane—not Everett. The City’s own publicly-available crime information
19 about Everett establishes otherwise. (See Declaration of Hannah Ard, dated November 3, 2017 20 (“Ard Decl.”) ¶¶ 3–6.) Bikini-barista stands are no more likely to attract crime than are 21 Starbucks or McDonald’s restaurants. In the past year, the number of crimes around Edge’s
22 bikini-barista stand was less than half the crimes outside the Starbucks at 515 SE Everett Mall
23 Way. (Id. ¶¶ 10–11, Ex. A.) Starbucks experienced eight criminal incidents. (Id. ¶¶ 11, 14, Ex A.)
24 In contrast, Edge’s stand only experienced three incidents limited to theft. (Id. ¶¶ 11, 14, Ex A.)
25 Bikini-barista stands Dream Bean Coffee and Double Divas Espresso also experienced only three 26 incidents. (Id. ¶¶ 11, 14, Ex A.) The McDonalds at 2001 Everett Avenue experienced six criminal 27 incidents. (Id. ¶¶ 11, 14, Ex A.) There was also a sexual assault about a third of a mile from the 28 McDonalds. (Id. ¶¶ 11, 14, Ex A n.4.) No sexual assaults occurred anywhere near Edge’s bikini-

1 barista stand. (Id. ¶ 11, 14, Ex A.)

2 The City also stretches the truth by stating that “[p]ublic masturbation continues at 3 Hillbilly Hotties stands.” Ms. Edge did not testify to any continuing activity at her stands, but 4 instead testified about one incident where she obtained the license plate number of the vehicle
5 and told the driver that he could not engage in such conduct at her stand. (Dkt. No. 32-1, Ex. A at 6 118:2–17.) And the one other similar incident cited by the City did not occur in Everett, but in 7 Monroe. (Dkt. No. 32-1, Ex. D at 97:24–98:21.) Banning an entire industry over a single incident
8 in Everett is unreasonable.

9 The City asserts that the “bikini barista ‘business model’ remains inherently harmful.” As 10 evidence of this, the City reports that an owner of one of the stands “is reported to engage in 11 sexual relations with baristas.” But this type of conduct is sadly not limited to any particular 12 business. As media revelations regarding Hollywood directors and producers, the “me too” 13 campaign, and recent stories about misconduct in our state and national capitols demonstrates,
14 men sometimes abuse positions of power. A ban on bikini-barista stands will not have any impact 15 on this type of crime.

16 The City also complains that Baristas have sold photographs of themselves in bikinis, 17 accepted gifts of swimwear and lingerie, and that one barista “advertised she was launching a 18 ‘XXX’ website.” But none of these are criminal acts, and the City has no evidence that any 19 barista engaged in prostitution. The City’s final justification—that bikinis are easier to remove 20 than other clothing—lacks merit. The t-shirts and shorts the City sanctioned could be pulled up, 21 pushed down, or slid aside using the same or less effort than it takes to remove a bikini. And some 22 bikini outfits, like the elaborately sculpted designs that Plaintiff Natalie Bjerke makes for herself,
23 take considerable effort to remove. The ordinances do not prevent body touching if a rogue 24 barista and customer decide to break the law against prostitution or lewd conduct.

25 The City puts forth a “series of investigations over many years,” relying heavily on the 26 Declaration of Sgt. James Collier of the Everett Police Department. But the Collier Declaration is 27 based on investigations that occurred four to eight years ago, focusing on two bad actors
28 convicted of criminal activity. The City argues that even after the arrest of Panico and others

1 involved with her stands, “lewd conduct and drug use continued unabated at the stands.” But 2 the Collier Declaration makes clear that this activity occurred only for a short period of time at 3 the same stands owned by Panico and others previously targeted. (Dkt. No. 29 ¶ 5.9.4.) And Ms.
4 Panico’s stands were the exception rather than the rule. Police interviews with the baristas who
5 worked for Panico show a completely different story at other stands, including Edge’s Hillbilly
6 Hotties. For example, in an interview with police, one barista stated that “she worked at the Bee
7 Hive and there was a no tolerance policy.” (Dkt. No. 9-2 at 31.)

8 Two of Panico’s former employees came to work for Edge and were subsequently arrested
9 in 2013. The City claims that Edge “never investigated what happened.” No investigation was 10 required—two rogue employees violated the law and were fired. (Dkt. No. 32-1, Ex. A at 102:17– 11 19.) Edge then began checking criminal records, and now will not hire an employee who has ever
12 been arrested while working as a barista or for prostitution. (Id. at 62:4–63:14.) She installed 13 cameras and monitors them to make sure the baristas are safe and following the rules. (Dkt.
14 No. 10 ¶ 16.) And she met with Everett police and did what they asked. (Dkt. No. 21-1, Ex. A at 15 102:24–103:2.) After Edge made those changes, there were no further issues. Nor after the City 16 conducted its few enforcement operations, which ended nearly four years ago, have there been 17 arrests made at any other Everett bikini-barista stand.

18 The Dress-Code Ordinance would not have provided the City with any greater leverage
19 than the prostitution and racketeering laws, and it is unreasonable to suggest that the Panico and 20 Wheeler gang would have followed the law if the ordinances were in effect. The exceptional cases
21 of Wheeler and Panico do not justify imposing a dress code on the existing law-abiding baristas.

22 Banning bikinis at barista stands will not reduce crime. The City’s stated reason for 23 imposing the Dress-Code Ordinance is pretext to justify a ban of the Baristas’ protected 24 expression.
25
26
27
28

1 4. The Dress-Code Ordinance fails intermediate scrutiny because it imposes a
2 greater restriction on expression than necessary to advance City interests.

3 If the Dress-Code Ordinance is content neutral, intermediate scrutiny applies and the law
4 must be narrowly tailored to further a substantial government interest while leaving open
5 adequate alternate forums of expression. Clark v. Cmty. for Creative Non-Violence, 468 U.S. 288,
6 293 (1984). The City’s claimed interest is to target the secondary effect of crime. The City has 7 the burden to establish the existence of the secondary effects, the causal link between the 8 regulated conduct and those effects, and that the regulation is narrowly tailored to address the 9 effects. City of Los Angeles v. Alameda Books, Inc., 535 U.S. 425, 439 (2002). And in doing so, the 10 City cannot “get away with shoddy data or reasoning.” Id.

11 The City argues that when “a restriction prohibits the conduct that is causing the 12 secondary harms, it is narrowly tailored because it is targeting the exact source of the harm.” The 13 City must then establish that the bikini-barista stand causes the harm. There is nothing inherent 14 in wearing a bikini to serve coffee that causes the secondary effects complained of by the City.
15 Yet the City’s solution is to ban serving coffee in bikinis.

16 Any content-neutral regulation must “leave open ample alternative channels” for the 17 expressive conduct. Anderson, 621 F.3d at 1065 (citing Clark, 468 U.S. at 293). The City says it
18 passes this test because it regulates attire “only at quick service facilities” and the Baristas are 19 “free to express whatever message they wish by wearing bikinis (or less) in other aspects of their 20 lives.” This argument ignores that a core part of the Baristas’ expression is wearing the bikinis to 21 work. It is wearing bikinis at a barista stand that allows them to express their control and agency
22 over their personal appearance in their professional lives. As Ms. Bjerke testified when talking 23 about the bikinis she designs for her performances at work: “it’s the only place that I’ve ever 24 been able to express myself like that.” (Dkt. No. 32-1, Ex. B at 30:4–6.) That expression is not 25 possible “in other aspects of their lives.” The Dress Code Ordinance shuts down all avenues for 26 the Baristas to engage in their expressive activity. Thus, the Dress-Code Ordinance fails the 27 “alternative channels” requirement of intermediate scrutiny.
28

1 B. The Ordinances violate substantive due process and equal protection.

2 1. The Ordinances violate substantive due process because they prevent the
3 Baristas from earning a living in their chosen field.

4 The City attempts to rebut the Baristas’ substantive due-process arguments by analogizing
5 to cases involving personal appearance or hair length. But the Supreme Court held that 6 substantive due-process “liberty...includes certain specific rights that allows persons...to define
7 and express their identity.” Obergefell v. Hodges, 135 S.Ct. 2584, 2593 (2015). This case is about 8 self-expression and identity, and thus addresses a fundamental liberty interest. Working as a 9 bikini-barista allows each Barista to express her identity and define herself.

10 The City also argues that substantive due-process rights are intact if the Baristas can 11 pursue an occupation in the coffee service industry, even if they cannot work as bikini baristas.
12 But the Supreme Court has recognized “that the liberty component of the Fourteenth
13 Amendment’s Due Process Clause includes some generalized due process right to choose one’s 14 field of private employment.” Conn v. Gabbert, 526 U.S. 286, 292 (1999). That right extends 15 beyond being able to work in the coffee business generally. See Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390, 16 399 (1923) (recognizing a liberty right of an individual to contract and “engage in any of the 17 common occupations of life.”).

18 2. The Ordinances violate equal protection because they only apply to women.

19 The Citywide Ordinance discriminates against women because it criminalizes partial 20 exposure of the female breast but not the male breast. The Supreme Court noted that the test for 21 determining the validity of a gender-based classification “must be applied free of fixed notions
22 concerning the roles and abilities of males and females. Care must be taken in ascertaining 23 whether the statutory objective itself reflects archaic and stereotypic notions.” Mississippi Univ.
24 for Women v. Hogan, 458 U.S. 718, 724–25 (1982). The City asserts that the Citywide Ordinance
25 requires both men and women to “cover those parts of their bodies which are intimately 26 associated with the procreation function.” But courts have acknowledged that nudity is a social 27 concept which has changed over time. See, e.g., Free the Nipple – Ft. Collins v. City of Ft. Collins, 28 Colo., 237 F. Supp. 3d 1126, 1134 (D. Colo. 2017).

1 And how society views the female breast has changed and evolved over time. For example,
2 breastfeeding in public was once taboo, and now it is widely accepted. Women are not charged
3 with lewd behavior when feeding an infant. The idea that a woman who partially exposes her 4 breast is engaging in criminal conduct while a man who does the same is an archaic and 5 stereotypical notion, violating equal protection.

6 And the invasive search required to enforce the law—where an officer must take 7 measurements on and about a woman’s breast to determine whether she complies—would be 8 extraordinary. The fact that one of the City’s witnesses asserts that “EPD would never use the 9 type of techniques the plaintiffs appear to be concerned about” is meaningless. Just because 10 enforcement has not happened does not mean it will not happen. And when it does, the invasive 11 search will impact women and not men, violating their equal-protection rights. Side-stepping the 12 issue by saying the search has not happened yet does not escape the fact that the Ordinance is set 13 up for discriminatory and offensive treatment of women.

14 While the Dress Code Ordinance is gender-neutral on its face, it violates equal protection
15 because it has both a discriminatory impact and a discriminatory purpose. See Personnel Adm’r v.
16 Feeney, 442 U.S. 256, 274 (1979). The City acknowledges that no “quick service facilities” exist
17 except bikini-barista stands, and that the law was designed to target “crimes of a sexual nature
18 occurring at bikini barista stands.” Thus, the real target of the Dress-Code Ordinance is bikini-
19 barista stands, where only female employees work. While the City talks about “bro-rista stands”
20 with male employees, none exist in the City of Everett.

21 And the legislative history of the Dress Code Ordinance demonstrates targeting of women.
22 Even though there is rampant crime throughout the City at places like Starbucks and McDonalds
23 where men also work, the City made no effort to examine criminal activity in other commercial 24 locations. The Dress-Code Ordinance was targeted at a women-only business.

25 Gender-based classifications require an exceedingly persuasive justification to pass muster.
26 An ordinance is unconstitutional unless it serves an important governmental objective and the 27 means employed are substantially related to the achievement of the objective. See Mississippi
28 University for Women, 458 U.S. at 721–22. The City claims the prevention of “public acts of lewd

1 conduct” to justify the Citywide Ordinance, and prevention of “crimes of a sexual nature” to 2 justify the Dress-Code Ordinance. But there is no higher incidence of “crimes of a sexual
3 nature” or “public acts of lewd conduct” at bikini-barista stands in Everett than at McDonald’s
4 restaurants or Starbucks coffee shops. Indeed, there is no higher incidence of crimes of any
5 nature at bikini-barista stands than at other similar commercial establishments. So the means 6 employed—a dress code and preventing exposure of part of a woman’s breast—to achieve these 7 objectives cannot be substantially related to the objectives themselves. Thus, the ordinances
8 violate equal protection.

9 3. The Citywide Ordinance does not advance the City’s stated reasons for the law,
10 and thus fails a rational-basis review.

11 The City claims two reasons for the Citywide Ordinance—protecting “unwilling audiences
12 from exposure to nudity” and “simplifying enforcement.” The Citywide Ordinance addresses 13 neither goal. To support the justification for regulating nudity, the City cites a wide range of 14 cases addressing toplessness or full nudity. But being completely nude or exposing a nipple,
15 areola, or the entirety of the buttocks has always violated the law. The existing law fully addresses 16 the concern. The Citywide Ordinance makes it unlawful to expose “more than one-half of the 17 part of the female breast located below the top of the areola” and the “bottom one-half of the 18 anal cleft.” The city has no evidence that partial exposure of a woman’s breast violates 19 community standards, or that there is an unwilling audience that requires protection from a 20 partial breast. Nor is there anything even remotely linking the Citywide Ordinance to the 21 secondary harms the City claims it wants to remedy.

22 And the City’s position that the Citywide Ordinance has made enforcement simpler is 23 puzzling. Before the Citywide Ordinance amending the existing lewd-conduct ordinance, a quick 24 glance by a police officer would reveal whether a woman violated the law. But now, a woman is 25 required to expose her areola so that law enforcement can measure with a ruler or tape measure
26 how much of her breast is revealed in order to enforce the ordinance. The Citywide Ordinance
27 achieves the opposite of the City’s stated reason or the law. Enforcement becomes much more 28 difficult, not simpler.

1 C. The Baristas have proven irreparable harm and that the balance of hardships tips
2 sharply in their favor.

3 The City does not dispute that losing free-speech rights, even for minimal time, is 4 sufficient harm to support an injunction. See Klein v. City of San Clemente, 584 F.3d 1196, 1207–
5 08 (9th Cir. 2009). Because the ordinances burden speech, this element is met and irreparable
6 harm is unchallenged. But even if the Baristas did not have this harm, they have amply 7 demonstrated irreparable harm if the ordinances are not enjoined.

8 The City admits that loss of business goodwill can provide sufficient harm but argues the 9 Baristas must support this allegation with evidence. The Baristas have many regular customers
10 who expect to interact with them wearing their regular attire. (Dkt. No. 10 ¶¶ 45–50.) When they 11 were forced to wear the City’s prescribed uniform, business fell and the regulars stopped coming.
12 (Id. ¶¶ 46–48.) If the Baristas are forced to abandon the bikini-barista model, it is likely that they 13 will permanently lose the goodwill of those regular customers. (Id.)

14 To meet the standard for an injunction, the Baristas may demonstrate either (1) a 15 combination of probable success on the merits and the possibility of irreparable injury or (2) that 16 serious questions are raised and the balance of hardships tips sharply in its favor. Rent-A-Ctr., Inc.
17 v. Canyon Television and Appliance Rental, Inc., 944 F.2d 597, 602 (9th Cir. 1991). Because the 18 Baristas have demonstrated probable success on the merits and irreparable injury, the Court need
19 not reach the balance of hardships. If the Court reaches the issue, the Baristas’ inability to earn 20 the same living and interference with their right of expression outweighs the City’s short delay in 21 enforcing new ordinances.

1 CONCLUSION

2 The Baristas are likely to succeed on the merits of their claims. There is no reasonable
3 dispute that the Baristas are engaged in pure expression. The Supreme Court clarified that 4 expression need not be a succinctly articulable message as the City argues. And since the City has 5 other means to achieve its stated goals, the ordinances violate the Barista's First Amendment
6 rights. The ordinances also violate substantive due-process because they interfere with the 7 Baristas' ability to define themselves and earn a living.

8 The ordinances also violate equal protection because they apply to women and not men, 9 without an exceedingly persuasive justification. The Baristas would suffer irreparable harm and 10 the balance of hardships tips in their favor because they would lose their free-speech rights and 11 ability to earn the same living if the ordinances are enforced.

12 The Court should issue a preliminary injunction preventing enforcement of the ordinances
13 until the Court can finally determine if they are unconstitutional.

14
15 Dated: November 3, 2017

NEWMAN DU WORS LLP

16
17

Derek A. Newman, WSBA No. 26967

dn@newmanlaw.com

Jessica V. Newman, WSBA No. 28080

jessica@newmanlaw.com

Keith Scully, WSBA No. 28677

Keith@newmanlaw.com

Jason Sykes, WSBA No. 44369

Jason@newmanlaw.com

Attorneys for Plaintiffs